Village trustees hear feedback on Century Blvd. redevelopment

By COLLEEN FLYNN colleenf@millertonnews.com

MILLERTON — On Saturday, Feb. 1, a public information meeting was held to discuss the "complete street" plan for Century Boulevard.

Village of Millerton trustees Matthew Hartzog and David Sherman have been involved with the preparation of forming the new look along Century Boulevard.

"Matt Hartzog and I have been involved," said Sherman, "We realize that in order to proceed into the future, we really need to have a good plan that everyone, most everyone, likes."

ICE activity rumors ramp up in region, raids reported in Amenia

By KRISTA A. BRIGGS kristab@millertonnews.com

AMENIA — On Tuesday, Jan. 28, rumblings of the presence of U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement officers in Northern Dutchess began making the rounds.

While their exact numbers are unknown, an immigrant population lives in Amenia and its surrounding communities, due in part to its rural character and, for some immigrants, the availability of work on local farms.

As the week progressed, the rumors remained unconfirmed. By Thursday, Jan. 30, Amenia town supervisor Leo Blackman had received three separate reports of concerning incidents involving immigrants — including one report of the verbal harassment of a group of migrants who were taunted by calls of "I.C.E., I.C.E., I.C.E." from unknown persons – but the incidents remained unverified as no police reports had been filed to Blackman's knowledge as of Jan. 30.

On Friday, Jan. 31, a notice appeard on the Town of Amenia's website seemingly confirming the rumors of raids, along with a pamphlet of directives for individuals and families who may be potential targets of I.C.E. As part of the notice, a statement from Blackman was included which read, "I am aware that there have been at least two raids here in the last few days by Immigration and Customs Enforcement, I.C.E. Residents of Amenia should not be made to feel unsafe or threatened in our community. Rules that made churches and schools off-limits to I.C.E. have just been rescinded by the Federal government. For the sake of anyone who may be targeted, your rights are attached."

The accompanying pamphlet, printed in English, Spanish and French, advises immigrants of their legal protections and directs them to contact the Office for New Americans hotline, the Immigrant Defense Project or the New York Immigration Coalition for further guidance. The pamphlet also cautions immigrants to beware of scams and to set up a safety plan for themselves and their families.

A link to the notice has since been removed.

While Blackman has yet to provide specifics regarding the raids in Amenia, he is an advocate of immigrant rights and believes in their value to the local community. "Our local economy depends very

SALISBURY, Conn. — Jumpfest

2025 attracted thousands of guests to Satre Hill for a weekend of ski jumping, traditional treats, bonfires and brews Feb. 1 and 2.

Typically a three-day event, Friday night's festivities were canceled due to rainy conditions, which made for slick slopes on Saturday and Sunday.

Saturday was bright, clear and on the cold side in the mid-20s, with an irregular wind that the jumpers had to be mindful of. Snowflakes were flying when the action kicked off at about 9 a.m. with the youth competitions on the K20 jump.

"It's very winterlike here at Satre Hill," said WZBG Radio's Dale Jones, who once again assumed announcing duties for the competition. Gusty winds had fortunately mostly abated for the jumpers of smaller stature, with windows of sunshine intermittently breaking through the flurries and illuminating the paint-streaked landing hill.

SWSA's own Caleb Bodwell, who placed 2nd last year, put down a sizable 10-meter jump. Shortly after, Catherine Chor flew 11.5 meters, the

LJMN adds Hermans, Siegler to board; elects officers

FALLS VILLAGE, Conn. — LJMN Media, which publishes The Lakeville Journal and The Millerton News, has announced the addition of two new members to its board of directors. Dick Hermans and Scott Siegler join Meg Downey, Henry Blodget and Rob Fish, each added early in 2024, as its newest members.

Hermans, of Pine Plains, co-founded Oblong Books & Records with locations in Millerton and Rhinebeck. He has also served on the Pine Plains School Board and is a current member of the Pine Plains Planning Board. Most recently, he co-founded The New Pine Plains Herald, a digital newspaper covering Pine Plains, and serves as Vice-President of their board.

Siegler, a resident of Sharon, participated in the startup of TriStar Television Studio, Netscape Communications, Pandora Media and Granada America. He has served on the board of the Shorenstein Center on Media, Politics and Public Policy at Harvard's Kennedy School and The Center for Public Integrity.

Downey, of Millerton, began her career in journalism as editor of The Millerton News, executive editor of The Poughkeepsie Journal and managing editor of the Tennessean in Nashville, Tennessee. Downey is a two-time Pulitzer Prize finalist and has won more than 40 national journalism awards. In her career, she has also taught journalism and ethics at Vassar College.

Blodget, of Cornwall, is co-founder, Executive Chair of the Board and occasional columnist of Business Insider Inc., a global journalism organization with offices and affiliates in more than 17 countries. A former Wall Street analyst, he is often a guest on CNBC, CNN, MSNBC, NPR and other networks.

Fish, of Salisbury, founded the design firm Robert V. Fish & Associates, which specialized in residential architecture in Hartford, Fairfield and Litchfield Counties and won dozens of design awards. He has served multiple terms on the boards of Sharon Land Trust and Sharon Playhouse.

CEO and Publisher James H. Clark said "The addition of these members reinforces our commitment to strong local journalism in our communities in the Northwest corner of Connecticut and Eastern Dutchess County in New York. As we continue to look at new ways of delivering the news, each of their skill sets and expertise will be invaluable."

Board membership now stands at 14 representing diverse professional backgrounds and expertise.

Additionally, the Board of Directors elected a new slate of officers at its annual meeting in December. Dan Dwyer, of Salisbury, has been elected chair; Brian Ross, of Sharon, Vice Chair; Devereux Chatillon, of Sharon, Secretary and Karen Byers, of North Canaan, Treasurer. The Board recognized Noreen Doyle, who served as founding Chair and who will continue on as a member of the board.

On assuming the chairmanship, Dwyer noted that "the challenges we face are more complex than simply 'saving the paper.' Our Board's duty is to provide financial stability and resources that enable management and editorial staff to continue the improvements they are making. We are also responsible to develop a plan for the future, so we are finding ways of getting information to our communities — when and how they access it — so we remain the trusted source of local news, information and opinion. I'm confident our Board is up to the challenge."

Robert A. Barton

COPAKE — Robert (Bob) A. Barton of Copake Falls passed away at the age of 80, on Jan. 23, 2025, after a long and courageous battle with cancer. He was vacationing at his sister's home in Sarasota, Florida, at the time of his death.

Bob or Bobby, as he was affectionately known, was a shining light in the lives of all who had the privilege of knowing him. Bob's personality brought warmth and joy to everyone he encountered. His journey on this earth was one marked by love, giving spirit, compassion, and unwavering faith in God. His passing has left a void in the hearts of his family, friends, and many more whose lives were touched by him

Bob was born in Great Barrington, Massachusetts, Nov. 22, 1944, along with his twin brother Richard, a real surprise to his parents, Kenneth L. Barton and Carolyn H. (Chadbourne) Barton. Bob grew up in Ancramdale, New York. He always loved Ancramdale and felt fortunate to have grown up in such a beautiful place. twin brother Richard bought a small general store (Grube's) in Copake Falls. He and his brother operated the store and lived over the store for five years before renting the store space to the US Postal Service. The Copake Falls Post Office continues to occupy that space. Bob and his brother continued occupying upstairs, sometimes part time, sometimes full time until his death.

After college, before being drafted into the Army, Bob worked in Wallace's Department Store, Poughkeepsie, New York, as an assistant buyer in the home furnishings department. After military service he located in Boston, Massachusetts where he worked at Filene's men's department.

In 1970 Bob decided to move back to Columbia County, New York to join his brother in a business venture in Copake Falls. In 1979 Bob, again moved back to Boston to work at the US Small Business Administration, District Disaster Office. Soon after transferring to the Boston Veterans Administration Hospital in late 1979, marking the beginning of his long career with the VA Health Care System. In 1986 he moved to Plainsboro/Princeton, New Jersey area to join his life partner, continuing to work for the Veterans Administration in the VA Health Care System, New Jersey, until he retired Dec. 2007 after 28 years with the VA Health Care System.

After retirement Bob moved back to Ancramdale with his partner of 35 years, John (Jack) W. Seiber. Bob and Jack married on Aug. 1, 2011, in Manhattan. After a few years in Ancramdale, they moved to Sarasota, Florida. After Jack's death Bob moved back to Copake Falls in 2023.

American Legion ushers in February with pancake breakfast to benefit 4-H

By KRISTA A. BRIGGS kristab@millertonnews.com

MILLERTON — On Groundhog Day, Feb. 2, the focus at the American Legion hall was on food and fundraising, not furry rodents with suspicious meteorological skills.

While the morning was chilly, the atmosphere was upbeat. Friends and neighbors came together to nosh on pancakes, bacon, eggs and more in support of this venerable veterans' organization which, in turn, boosts the community with events in support of 4-H, Toys for Tots and other charitable endeavors.

With a packed house and a line beginning to spill outside, the pancake breakfast was a well attended event. Cars parked outside the Legion's hall featured license plates from three states - New York, Connecticut and Vermont. While Jumpfest — taking place this past weekend in nearby Salisbury — may have attracted some diners, members of the local community including the fire company, law enforcement and notables on the political and municipal scene also showed up in support of the event. Among the guests were Dutchess County legislator Chris Drago, D-19 and Millerton mayor Jenn

For Rob Cooper, owner of the vintage Mobil gas station on Route 44, the event was more than just food.

"It's good just to see people and give something back to the Legion hall," said Cooper, who was joined at his table by friends Bruce Flint and Steven Haire, who were mulling over their dining choices while waiting to place their orders.

John and Linda Ingram of Millerton, who were finishing up breakfast at a nearby table agreed, emphasizing the importance of supporting veterans. The Ingrams, who've been attending the event at the American Legion for approximately seven years, praised the quality of the food as well as the Legion's fundraising efforts. "They support 4-H," said John Ingram, "and we support that right back."

In Remembrance

Barbara Victorien

I knew Barbara when she worked at Nicolas-Tobin in Kent. I paid bills in person for the pleasure of speaking to her. Our contact was minimal but she left a deep impression of grace, kindness and capability.

When she learned that I was going to Berlin, New Hampshire, she told me that a great uncle who was a Civil War veteran was buried there. Berlin City Hall told me exactly where to look. The modest stone, less than 12" by 12", is in the front row near my parents' grave. I always stop at the soldier's resting place. Now I will think of her, too.

How will you remember Barbara?

Anthony J. Stewart

J. Stewart, 62, of 40B Jackson Road lost his battle with ALS as the sun was rising on Jan. 28, 2025, at the Hospital of Central Connecticut in New Britain with his sisters at his side. He was born Nov. 13, 1962, in Winsted, the son of Patricia A. (Piretti) White of North Canaan and the late Bradley Stewart.

Anthony was the owner of Anthony J. Stewart Landscaping and Tree Service.

Anthony grew up in North Canaan, loving to be outside and in the woods. It was truly fitting that after graduation from HVRHS and working for local landscapers that he started his own business. His work on many properties in the area and the beautiful views that he cut are a testament to the creative visions he had. Anthony was his own man and fiercely protective of his family. If he called you "Bud" you knew you were his friend.

In addition to his mother, Anthony is survived by his two daughters; Victoria A.

SHARON — Anthony Stewart of Torrington and Erica Opromollo, her husband Joe of Watertown and their two sons Nolan and Lincoln. Anthony is also survived by his two sisters; Kim Casey, her husband Jay of North Canaan and Jill McGee, her husband Ray of Peoria Heights, Illinois. His two nephews; Jason Casey, his wife Allison, and their two daughters, Willow and Weslyn; and Ryan Casey.

A service of remembrance and celebration of Anthony's life will both be held at the North Canaan VFW, 104 South Canaan Road, Canaan, CT 06018 on Friday Feb. 7, 2025. The service will begin at 5 p.m. with the celebration immediately following.

In lieu of flowers, donations can be made in Anthony's name to: ALS United CT https://alsunited.org/ or Compassionate Care ALS https://ccals.org/

Both of these ALS organizations have given us invaluable support and resources offering us strength and support throughout this journey.

Here comes climate change

ately, people who in the past seldom gave it a second thought are beginning to talk about the weather.

The main reason, of course, has been the catastrophic wildfires forming the worst natural disaster in California's history, still continuing with no clear end in sight. California has become known all over the world for the frequency and ferocity of its wildfires but this one is the worst so far. Climate change is clearly the underlying reason.

The year 2023 was the Earth's warmest on record — until 2024. Climatologists tell us that the next few years are going to be hotter still. And the incoming Trump administration's plan to burn more fossil fuel than ever before will guarantee more new record high temperatures.

For those who are unaware, the Earth's atmosphere has a growing proportion of heat-blanketing "greenhouse gases," especially carbon dioxide and methane, largely the result of the burning of coal, oil, and natural gas. These gases lock in the heat of the sun's rays in the atmosphere thereby heating up the air, the water and the land.

Oil companies have been avidly promoting what they call "carbon capture and sequestration," the removal of carbon dioxide from the air and its capture and storage deep underground. The fossil fuel businesses believe that CCS provides a justification for using oil and gas indefinitely. But this technology is extremely expensive, potentially very dangerous and unworkable at anywhere near the scale needed to make a meaningful difference.

Global warming or climate change does not cause bad weather conditions; rather it seriously exacerbates them making them more severe. Warmer air allows clouds to hold more moisture and thus drop more rain in a storm. This summer's catastrophic floods in Spain were made much worse because the Mediterranean Sea, surrounded and cut off from the Atlantic, warmed up significantly and together with the mountainous land along the coast turned typical floods into enormous ones.

Usually, hurricanes follow fairly predictable paths, staying generally along the coastline. But last summer's Hurricane Helene veered into far west North Carolina causing massive storm and flood damage. Primarily this happened because of the mountainous terrain of the Blue Ridge chain of western North Carolina, which formed a natural barrier, forcing the storm's moisture to condense, causing extreme rainfall in the valley near Asheville especially when combined with the already saturated ground from earlier storms.

In the middle of the country tornados are occurring with increasing frequency, arriving with little warning and causing considerable damage.

Across the world crippling heat waves hospitalized and even killed people unprepared for the incredible temperatures. All around the U.S. summer heat waves have been growing. Phoenix had temperatures over 100 degrees for more than a month. In India, Pakistan, and Saudi Arabia temperatures reached 130 degrees Fahrenheit.

Florida used to be the place much of America chose to get away to, either for a warm, sunny holiday or for retirement, escaping the harsh northern winters. But in addition to trying to cope with an enormous population explosion over the past 60 years, Florida has environmental problems that can't be overlooked. As a peninsula flanked by the Atlantic Ocean and the Gulf of Mexico, Florida is battered by hurricanes more than any other state. A hurricane crashing onto the East Coast is likely to continue through the state's narrow midsection and maintain its destructive path through to its west coast and beyond into other nearby states. As with other states that become resort areas, development has been overwhelmingly on or near the coasts where weather damage is greatest. Home insurance has become difficult to obtain. Rising seas, a worldwide phenomenon, is unusually acute and is coupled with sea water rising from below due to the porosity of the land underneath. As a result, Florida's streets are often flooded when there has been no rain.

I used to think that forest fires were a problem mostly just for California and a few adjacent states. And to listen to Donald Trump and others one might think the problem would go away if only Democratic politicians would "maintain their forests." But in the summer of 2023, the largest, most noticeable wildfires were happening in Quebec followed by others all across the U.S. and Canada. In the summer of 2024 there were even a batch of devastating wildfires in the Northeast that extended into New York City including Brooklyn's Prospect Park, a harbinger of what's to

The Northwest Corner offers one of the most benign climates in the United States and this becomes especially true as the country's climate becomes increasingly troubled. Connecticut was once called "the land of steady habits," a reference perhaps to what many considered dull, excessive moderation. But with the increase in severe and often violent weather a more boring climate seems a decided plus. Over the past 40 years, the Northwest Corner has experienced no weather calamities worthy of national attention, the last one of note being the 1955 flood centered in Winsted. There've been only two tornados over the past 40 years (midwestern states usually have at least two per year), only modest hurricane damage and minor droughts. In recent years, unpleasant and often dangerous heat waves across the country have kept residents huddled indoors around their air conditioners but Northwest Corner folks can still enjoy summer out of doors.

The climate here remains more agreeable than it is in much of the rest of the country; but it is changing and at an increasing rate.

ture, planning and environmental science consultant company, for this project.

Brandee Nelson, Vice-President at Tighe & Bond, ran the meeting with a presentation that included renderings of potential looks for the Boulevard and sought advice from local residents.

"I myself am a civil engineer with a land use planning and development background, and we're here today to start a conversation," said Nelson, "We're here to talk about the community's vision for Century Boulevard."

According to Sherman, the Village has received funding from the Berkshire Taconic Community Foundation's Northeast Dutchess Fund and Hudson River Valley Greenway in their community planning funds, which will go toward the cost of this street renovation.

"From the 2018 Millerton Pedestrian Plan, one of the future projects in that plan was to re-envision Century Boulevard and make it a complete street," Nelson said. "A complete street is serving a variety of needs to the community.

There's pedestrian movement along that street. We know we have limited sidewalks out here, parking, trees, perhaps lighting, perhaps stormwater management, there could be a lot of different things in a complete street."

Nelson noted the importance of parking on Century Boulevard and how this plan would help pedestrians safely access the shops in the Village. She also said planners need to lay out a certain number of handicap accessibility spots, electric vehicle chargers and also provide a crosswalk in their "complete street."

Century Boulevard's width ranges from 70 feet to 93 feet, which surpasses the average street width of 50 feet, according to Nelson. Though the extra room allows more offerings to be installed, keeping up with that much pavement can be continually costly.

"We want to think, 'Can we accommodate some green space there? How can we allocate this space in a way that is economical for operation and maintenance in the future?" Nelson said. "Look how big that paved area is and that it doesn't have any kind of organizational framework. There's no striping. Not even a center line striping ... The day we were down here, people were kind of parked everywhere, and they were parked at different depths. We should think about how we can organize a little bit better."

A concerned resident brought up an issue of tractor trailers going in and out of Harrington's.

"That's why it's 90 [feet wide] there, to make that turn. When they come in, they sit there until they can back in," the resident said. "There's nobody to back them in and there's a car behind them, they have to wait until someone comes out to help."

After a handful of community members agreed with this worry, Nelson expressed an interest in reaching out to Harrington's specifically to help in finding a solution.

"We are going to take the information that you've shared with us today and go back and develop two concept plans for the complete street," Nelson said. "We will come back and hold a second meeting, and we are hoping to do that in early March time frame, where we will take more feedback from that."

After the second public information meeting, the hope is to turn the community's ideas into a preferred plan to present to the Village board, which is planned for April. This will show the specific cost plans and the ballpark of the low and high cost production.

"We're not talking about changing the street in the next two years," said Nelson. "We're probably about changing the street in the next five years, if we are successful in getting the grant funds."

The meeting ended with a table exercise of residents and community members writing on maps of the street, stating how they use the area or what they would like to see in the future.

"Feel free to mark them up," Nelson said. "I'm happy to take notes from anyone who's got thoughts on how this road can be used better."

Larry Stone, a ski jumping coach in winter sports mecca Lake Placid, New York and Chief of Competition for the weekend, said that Catherine's sister Caroline would be one to watch later in the day in the older age group. The sisters train together at their local jumping facility in Hanover, New Hampshire, Stone explained: "They're a good two-some."

Temperatures dropped as the day went on, and in response the two bonfires flanking the landing of the big jump kept growing. Lakeville local Fisher Rydingsword was stoking the flames with scrap wood, a picnic table and seemingly infinite pallets. At 16 years old, this is his eighth year tending to the fires, and he likes the work: "It gives me an excuse to play with fire," he said as he heaved another pallet atop the blaze.

The Cook Shack was busy around mealtime, as was the food truck offering pulled pork and mac and cheese.

To wash it down fans could choose between craft beers or hot toddies made with bourbon or rum as the main ingredient. The action was steady here too.

Some fans coped with the wind with tent-like shelters, but most were content to be bundled up and rely on the sun to stay warm. If that failed, there were the usual two bonfires on either side of the main jumping hill and a number of smaller fires in buckets and portable fire pits.

Salisbury Central School eighth grade students Bryce Salmon, Quin Sheil and Tommy Downey prowled the crowd selling baked goods and handwarmers. The boys were raising funds for the annual class trip to Washington, D.C.

A little before 1 p.m., a well-prepared group were getting in the mood. Steve and Adrienne Fayette from Newtown and Rich and Amy Ferrari of Brookfield had comfy chairs and were well and warmly clad. They were fortifying themselves with salami, cheese and crackers and a bottle of red wine to start. Rich Ferrari said after that they'd get to the sandwiches.

"We love this event," he said. At about 2 p.m. fans were still coming into Satre Hill. The parking lot was completely full, and people were sticking their cars wherever they could and hoofing it.

Sunday saw less wind and grayer skies for the Eastern U.S. Ski Jumping Championships with temperatures remaining more solidly in the mid-20s. These were good, fast conditions explained Jones, and the jumpers took advantage, putting on a spectacle of flight for the crowd.

The tone of the afternoon, though still joyous, was less boisterous and more focused than on Saturday. As skiers dropped in from their perch high on the tower, a hush would fall over the crowd, broken by cheers and the clang of more cowbells once the skis returned to snow.

Salisbury's own Islay Sheil surpassed 40-meters on her best Sunday jump. Sheil, who is 14, is the first SWSA youth athlete to have jumped the K65 since SWSA coach Seth Gardner jumped it in his early days, Spencer Taylor said.

Colin Delaney, who described himself as the "official/ unofficial" coach of the Eastern Ski Jumping and Nordic Combined team, said that Jumpfest is a vital component to the national circuit. "It's a really important hill size for training," he said, emphasizing that the event "brings together athletes with different goals in the sport."

While the Eastern Championship is a wrap, jumping season is far from over. Loher, who emerged from Jumpfest highly decorated, will be competing at the Junior World Championships on Feb. 11, while other jumpers on the team will travel to Park City, Utah for the Junior National Championships on Feb. 22.

Jumpfest 2025 was well attended with an estimated 1,600 guests on Saturday and 1,500 on Sunday.

much on the labor of recent immigrants — as America always has," he said, explaining his concerns over the motives of the Trump administration and immigration agents with respect to their targets. "Allegedly, these I.C.E. visits are targeted at immigrants with a criminal record," he said. "But I expect their mandate will expand. I want anyone who came to Amenia from Central America — or anywhere else — and has become part of the community to feel safe here."

Maintaining a sense of safety and normalcy is what Webutuck Central School District superintendent Raymond Castellani has been doing while keeping an eye on any local developments involving immigrant students and their families. As with Leo Blackman, Castellani has heard I.C.E.-related rumors in the area. Webutuck, which covers Amenia and North East, is made up of nearly 30% English language learners. Castellani noted that while he has not noticed any significant drops in attendance by immigrant students, he has been actively monitoring the situation and will continue working with his staff to ensure students continue to receive the education and in-school services they require. Castellani said the next few weeks will be critical as rumors continue to swirl, but he remains committed to keeping students ontask while advocating for their security. "Our goal is to keep students safe," Castellani said. Castellani added that should any incidents involving immigration agents occur on school grounds, he has directed his staff to contact him immediately.

Town supervisor Gary Ciferri of the Town of Washington, however, has yet to notice any immigration enforcement activity in his township. Ciferri's district, which includes Millbrook, is also a rural community which many immigrants call home. According to Ciferri, though, it's business as usual in his township. "I haven't heard of I.C.E. agents in the area," Ciferri said. "We're not doing anything differently in Millbrook and the Town of Washington."

On the county level, Dutchess Sheriff's Officers reported on Jan. 31 that they, too, were unaware of any I.C.E. presence in the area. "To my knowledge, we have not been contacted by federal authorities," Captain John Watterson said. Watterson added that any requests for cooperation with Federal agencies by the county would be contingent on the nature of the request and whether a warrant had been issued for a target. "It is possible," said Watterson, who reiterated he remained unaware of any I.C.E. activity in Northern Dutchess.

Alleged immigration enforcement rumors have also reached Dutchess County Legislator Chris Drago, D-19, whose district covers the Towns of North East, Stanford and Pine Plains as well as the Village of Millerton. Drago has been urging concerned residents to remain calm and logical. Contacted by the News on Sunday, Feb. 1, Drago responded by saying, "I've been hearing from a lot of community members concerned about potential I.C.E. activity in Dutchess County, and there are a lot of scary rumors circulating locally about raids. Right now it's important to distinguish between rumors and verified reports through asking questions and checking sources. It's also important to know your rights. Here in Dutchess County, we look out for our neighbors and community members because we know we are strongest and safest when we stand together. And our small businesses, farms, families and neighborhoods are better off because of it."

While immigrants remain on alert in Amenia and Northern Dutchess, Leo Blackman has remained strong in his support for their plight by summing up the town's history. "Amenia has been a welcoming place for many kinds of people for most of its history," Blackman said. "I want families here to know we intend to continue that tradition."

LIFESTYLE: NATALIA ZUKERMAN

Dina La Fonte at Mountainside and the rise of the 'sober curious' movement

he "sober curious" movement has gained momentum in recent years, encouraging individuals to explore life without alcohol-whether for health reasons, personal growth, or simple curiosity. Dina La Fonte, a certified recovery coach, is the Senior Business Affairs Associate at Mountainside, an alcohol and drug addiction treatment center with a holistic approach to wellness that has several locations, including the one in Canaan, Connecticut. With nearly five years of sobriety, La Fonte blends professional expertise with lived experience, making her a powerful advocate for recovery.

Like many, La Fonte's path to recovery was not just about removing alcohol; it was about rediscovering herself. "Once you get sober from a substance, whether it's alcohol, drugs, gambling or what have you, emotional aspects of change come into place," she explained. "It's not a hard stop; it's a continued process of integration and struggle. Her own journey has led her to a career in recovery coaching, allowing her to help others find their own path.

"What I love about my work at Mountainside is that it allows me to be who I am without forcing me into a mold," she said. "In recovery, we identify our authentic voice, establish boundaries, and clarify what we truly want."

La Fonte explained that the rise of the "sober curious" movement may reflect a cultural shift in how we approach alcohol and self-care. La Fonte attributes this change to open conversations that break down stigma. "Even five or six years ago, admitting you had a problem came with embarrassment," she said. "Now, the more we discuss it, the more people realize they're not alone." This newfound openness has perhaps made it easier for some individuals to explore sobriety and even do so without the pressure of a lifelong commitment.

Beyond emotional well-being, La Fonte also noted the physical benefits of sobriety. "It wasn't immediate, but after a year, I noticed my skin clearing up, my energy improving, and my confidence growing," she recalled. "Casual drinking dehydrates the skin, affects sleep, and contributes to inflammation. When people realize how much better they feel without alcohol, they want to hold onto that."

In her role at Mountainside, La Fonte has expanded beyond coaching to influence organization-wide initiatives. "I still work directly with clients, but now I also help evolve how we support them," she said. "Mountainside takes a holistic approach—integrating yoga, grief therapy, sound baths, and more. It's not about pushing people through a system; it's about meeting them where they are."

La Fonte uses her social media platform as a "micro-influencer" to promote sober living and wellness. "I focus on positivity in sobriety-whether it's skincare, self-care, or mental health. I test vegan and cruelty-free products, but I only promote what aligns with my values."

For those exploring sobriety, La Fonte's message is simple: "I'm not here to judge. I'm here to help." She encourages open conversations and meeting people where they are. "If you're curious about sobriety, let's talk. I don't need to know you to be proud of you. I don't need to know you to love you. I already love you. Just reaching out is a huge step."

With voices like La Fonte's leading the conversation, perhaps the sober curious movement is more than a trend—it's a cultural shift redefining what it means to live fully and authentically.

an. 27 marked the 80th anniversary of the liberation of Auschwitz-Birkenau. I traveled to Poland as part of a delegation for the commemoration and spent a few days before the event with my father and sister learning, remembering and gathering information.

My dad's parents, Miriam and Yehuda, of blessed memory, were deported to Auschwitz -Birkenau from the Lódz Ghetto. They both had families that perished and met each other after the camp was liberated.

I put my feet in the train tracks where they would have arrived, ran my hands across the walls of the horrible gas chambers, the broken wood of the crowded bunks, gathered dirt in my shoes where they would have walked, and made sure to touch the trunks of the trees along the path—innocent

My father's parents survived. How did they do it? Miriam was quickly sent to a work camp on the Czech border, and Yehuda played violin in the Auschwitz orchestra (aka the Death Orchestra). Music saved him. A million miracles saved them both.

Many members of our extended family did not survive.

Examining Mohawk Mountain's rich history

he Hotchkiss Library of Sharon hosted local author James Shay Feb. 2 for a talk on his new book "Mohawk Mountain Ski Area: The Birth of Snowmaking."

The book follows the life of Mohawk founder Walt Schoenknecht and his important contributions to the sport of skiing.

The evening presentation was delivered to an engaged audience of skiing fans in the library's main room. Shay began his talk with a few photographs of views from the top of Mohawk Mountain, showing distant mountain ranges, uniquely eroded rock faces and structures that still stand from the times of the revolutionary war.

Shay showed pamphlets, posters and original hand drawn maps and designs from when Mohawk first opened in 1947.

Shay spoke about the life of Walt Shoenknecht, the main subject of his book. Shoenknecht founded the Mohawk ski trails in 1947, leasing the land in 1946 and spending $45,000 on the construction of the ski

In Mohawk's second season, Mohawk did not get any snow and resorted to ordering several tons of ice blocks, crushing them and spreading them on the slopes. This process was time consuming, costly and overall a worse experience than real snow. From this season, Shoenknecht got the idea to look into snowmaking. Shoenknecht enlisted the help of the TEY Manufacturing company, run by Wayne Pierce, Dave Richey and Art Hunt. The three engineers used the research of Ray Ringer to build the first snow making machines. These machines were brought to Mohawk and are the first documented case of a trial run of the snow making machine.

TEY ended up filing the first patent for these devices, and snow machines were installed on the mountain. The machines continued to develop and evolve up through the 1980's and today there are one hundred modern snow machines on the slopes of Mohawk.

Shoenknecht was inducted into the skiing hall of fame in 1979 for his many contributions to the sport introduced in his ski areas on Mohawk and Mount Snow in Vermont. Today, Shoenkneckt's daughter Carol Lugar remains the president of Mohawk as one of the few remaining family-owned ski areas in the United States.

rina Hamlin is a singer, songwriter, and multi-instrumentalist based in Norfolk, Connecticut. Widely regarded as an accomplished performer, Hamlin has toured the U.S. and abroad for more than two decades with Melissa Etheridge, Dar Williams, Susan Werner, Charlie Musselwhite, and more.

A masterful player, Hamlin will be teaching free, introductory harmonica classes at the Norfolk Library Feb. 3 and 10 from 5:30 to 6:30 p.m.

Her affectionate, playful style on stage and in the classroom have earned her the reputation as a well loved and respected musical force among colleagues and students.

Hamlin loved music from an early age. She took piano lessons from 2nd through 8th grade, sang in her school choir, and over time, moved from piano to guitar and later into playing percussion/small drum kit. She eventually attended the Berklee College of Music in Boston.

"Harmonica was a happy accident. I had a friend who asked me to play it with her. She mentioned 'bending a note'. That opened up the instrument and my interest in it. It made it feel more like a voice. The second opening was harmonica as a rhythm instrument," Hamlin while having no technical idea of how to play the instrument made my head spin! I decided to just play and figure it out on my own," Hamlin said.

Inspired by Boston-based band "The One Eyed Jacks," Hamlin also observed what Charlie Musselwhite and Junior Wells were doing.

Hamlin primarily plays "Cross Harp" or "Second Position," which is typically where most blues players begin.

"I like it because it allows me to use the bendable notes for a more expressive sound. I love longer, string oriented lines and grooves. The folk or first position sound of Bob Dylan or Neil Young is not my first choice, but it is very necessary in some cases," Hamlin said.

Though she is a masterful player, the instrument continues to challenge and inspire her.

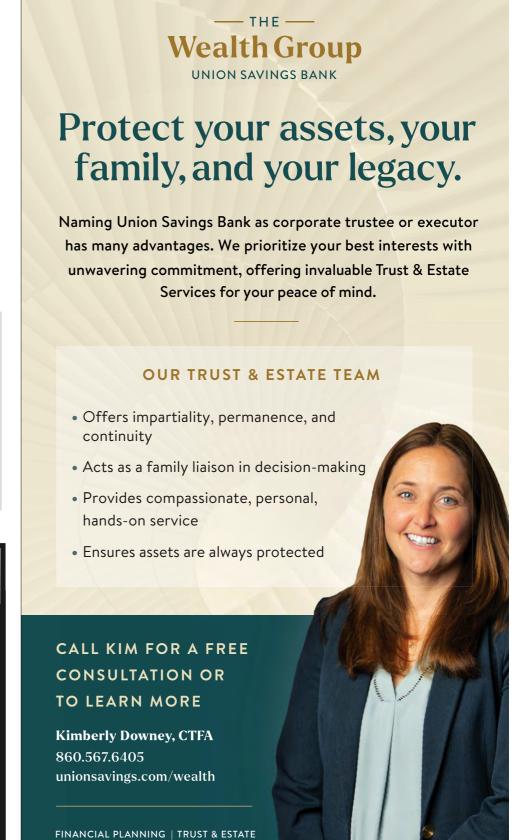

"I don't play a lot of traditional blues at this point. I love trying to play any style. The most challenging thing about it, and music in general, is leaving space for things to breathe and finding lines that add to the whole. I love that it is easy to carry and has such a wide range of expressions," Hamlin said.

Settling on the darker tones of Tombo's Lee Oskar Harps, Hamlin has suggestions for students.

"Don't buy the cheapest harmonica. They can be hard to play. Plan on spending $25-50. Hohner Special 20's are nice and Lee Oskars are too. I usually tell students to get a C harp. You can find so many videos and tutorials online, which might help you get started. Or maybe I can help!" she said.

"Say yes and learn something new. The beauty of it is that it is set up for success, meaning, you don't need to have a musical background to make sounds. I love to give people a foundation to work with and see where it goes from there," Hamlin added.

Salisbury Association gears up for 'samplers' exhibit

he next exhibit at the Salisbury Association's Academy Building will be about samplers.

Specifically, the extensive collection of Alexandra Lally Peters of Sharon and New York, which includes over 150 samplers — mostly American — dating from 1698 to 1850.

Jane Sellery was taking a look at the logistics of the display space on Saturday, Jan. 18.

Referring to a catalog of the Peters collection, she explained that samplers are usually needlepoint on linen, although there are some variations.

She pointed to the most familiar type, an alphabet, by way of orientation.

"Samplers were a status piece in the home," she said.

The exhibit will begin at the end of February, but the dates are not yet final. The show will include a talk by Peters.

Meanwhile, a visit to the Academy Building is always interesting, because there is no way to predict who or what will wander in.

The previous day, Friday, Jan. 17, when a reporter wandered in, Bill Morrill was consulting with the Association's Lou Bucceri about plans to head to Saratoga in the spring to consult with artillery experts at the Saratoga National the tattoo on my grandmother's forearm. This was enough.

But until you stand in the field the size of a city and look out at the expanse of crematoria, gas chambers, bunkers, the enormity and scale is just a story, words on a page. Now I have metabolized it in a different way. Now it is part of my DNA on a deeper level. Now I am changed.

On Holocaust Remembrance Day, world leaders from fifty countries—including King Charles, Volodymyr Zelenskyy, Emmanuel Macron, Justin Trudeau and so many moregathered with survivors and their families, musicians, friends and patrons of the organization in an enormous tent at the entrance to Birkenau. A freight train stood in front of the main gate. The car, from Germany, honors the 420,000 Hungarian Jews deported in 1944. Its conservation was funded by Frank Lowy, whose father, Hugo, was killed in the camp.

It radiated with horror in almost theatrical lighting, its now silenced whistle audible in the memories of all who gathered.

I listened to survivor after survivor speak. I watched as each world leader lit candles in remembrance. I said Kaddish (the Jewish prayer for the dead) with the several thousand people present.

But I only heard one person, 99-year-old Polish-born Swedish-Jewish doctor Leon Weintraub, utter any words that made sense to me, to my very fragile and shaken heart. He became a doctor after the war and told the group gathered the one absolute truth: there is only one race—the human race. He talked about the fact that under the skin, we are the same, words that were beyond powerful. In the very place where the most evil "experiments" were conducted to prove the supremacy of the Aryan race, this man stood there in all his beautiful bravery and told the truth. He was able, for a moment, to remove a hierarchy of care and replace it with an expansive, human appeal. He brought the memory of all the people killed, not just the Jews when he said, "be sensitive to all manifestations of intolerance and dislike of those who differ in terms of skin color, religion or sexual orientation." He widened the conversation, lest we also forget the Romani, queer, disabled, dissidents and more that were also victims of the Nazis. Lest

we forget the lesson of Gandhi when he said, "intolerance itself is a form of violence."

Weintraub ended by saying, "allowing the memory of millions of innocent victims to fade would be equivalent to robbing them of their lives a second time."

There are multiple genocides on planet earth right now. There are humans in actual concentration camps as I write this. There are whole populations being murdered.

After this experience, more than ever, I vow to speak the truth as loudly and as often as I can.

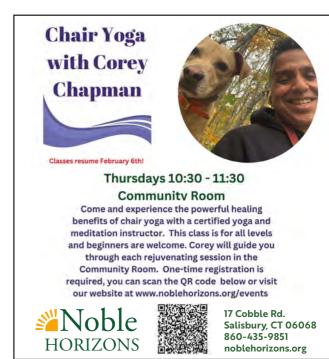

Suitcases taken from prisoners at Auschwitz.

Speaking up, questioning and protesting is not only not antisemitism, it defines the core principles of what it means to be Jewish. A beautiful Jewish human named Albert Einstein said, "Our task must be to free ourselves by widening our circle of compassion to embrace all living creatures and the whole of nature and its beauty."

This must and will be my task. Nothing else makes any sense.

Webutuck win within reach until final minutes

By NATHAN MILLER

nathanm@millertonnews.com

AMENIA — Webutuck's Tuesday, Jan. 28, basketball game against Pine Plains highlighted the importance of strong fundamentals.

The game came down to the final minutes, when the Pine Plains Bombers took an impressive scoring run to win 54-43.

Webutuck exhibited solid fundamentals, keeping the game competitive by winning rebounds and tighter plays. In their previous games the squad struggled under the net, but in the match-up against Pine Plains the Wildcats showed considerable improvement. However, the Bombers still managed to attempt more shots per possession than the Wildcats, indicating Webutuck still has some work to do on defense.

The Bombers were led by TK Regis, no. 2 of Pine Plains, with 20 points and TK Rathjen (?), no. 1 of Pine Plains, with 19.

The Wildcats' top scorers were Evan Brammer, no. 13 of Webutuck, with 11 points and Hayden Whiteley with 9.

Webutuck will host another home game Friday, Feb. 7, against S.S. Seward Institute starting at 4:30 p.m.

Pine Plains will be traveling to Rhinebeck High School Friday, Feb. 7, starting at 4:15

Webutuck's varsity squad showed off improved defensive chops which kept Pine Plains in check through most of the Tuesday, Jan. 28, game at Webutuck High School. The game ended with a Pine Plains win of 54-43.

The Journal, News seek young journalists for summer internship

The Lakeville Journal and Millerton News are seeking young journalists for an educational internship program. The six-week program provides training in the everyday operations of a community weekly. Interns will learn the news-making process from pitch to print through regular workshops with industry professionals on topics like photography, libel and copy-editing. Interns will also work closely with the papers' professional staff. Editors will collaborate with interns to develop stories and provide feedback throughout the program. The papers' professional reporters will take interns into the field for shadowing opportunities, teaching interviewing and photography in action. By the end of the program, interns should be capable of reporting and writing a hard news story or feature fit for print, and should have an article clip and a photograph to start a reporting portfolio. Interns should finish the six-week program with an understanding of current community journalism best practices, interviewing techniques and news writing skills.

Interested students can find the application online at millertonnews.com/education-internship-programs or on our social media accounts.
